Q&A for Investors

This document addresses a number of anticipated and likely questions that could be raised by the investment community regarding the definitive agreement between Nokia and Intellisync, the proposed acquisition terms and planned integration, and the rationale behind management and the directors' decision and process. This is neither a complete nor prioritized list of questions. In all cases when speaking with internal or external parties, do not deviate from the approved responses provided below. In those cases where questions arise that are not addressed below, please defer these to the appropriate individual on the Intellisync senior management team (Woody, Clyde, Rip, David) or counsel (Rich).

Why is Nokia buying Intellisync?

Nokia believes that this acquisition is a logical step in the implementation of Nokia's mobility strategy being that Nokia is committed to bringing extended mobility to the enterprise. The acquisition of Intellisync represents a significant advantage in the Nokia for Business Solutions portfolio. Intellisync is currently the leading platform-independent wireless messaging company in the world, with strong customer relationships among Carriers, Enterprise customers, Device OEM's and Software OEM's. Intellisync has built a brand, technology platform and mobile product portfolio that leads in many ways the overall mobile marketplace, including specific wireless applications in wireless messaging, device management and device security, and application mobilization.

The combined Nokia and Intellisync entity will make wireless applications for mobile devices easier to develop, deploy and use.

What is Intellisync's business strategy? How does it fit with Nokia's business strategy?

Intellisync's business strategy is to:

Be a leading software provider in the mobile market by developing and marketing software and applications for the enterprise, wireless carrier, device OEM and software OEM markets worldwide

Create the very best mobile customer experience on the widest array of devices, across the most platforms

Build a base of recurring revenues and run the business to achieve profitability

Is this acquisition primarily about email?

No, this acquisition is not just about wireless email. It is also about mobile device management and enterprise mobilization.

Why did Intellisync decide to sell to Nokia? Why now?

Management and the board of directors received an offer from Nokia that was attractive to the shareholders of Intellisync, and in discharging their fiduciary duties to the company and its shareholders, determined that the offer was in the best interests of the shareholders and the company.

Was this a hostile take-over or purchase?

No. The acquisition is a friendly merger, where, pending all appropriate approvals, Nokia intends to continue to operate much of Intellisync's products and core business operations. Nokia believes Intellisync's products, customers, market approach and resources will be an important element in their enterprise mobile strategy and plans.

How will the proposed acquisition benefit Intellisync shareholders?

AND/OR

What will be the valuation of Intellisync stock to its shareholders?

AND/OR

Will this stock be converted to Nokia stock? If so, when?

Under the terms of the agreement, Intellisync stockholders will receive USD 5.25 per share in cash for each Intellisync common share, implying an enterprise value of approximately USD 430 million or approximately EUR 368 million (on a fully-diluted basis).

When do you expect the proposed acquisition to become final?

We anticipate three to four months of detailed integration planning after the announcement of the pending transaction. The exact timing of the closing of a pending acquisition is difficult to know this far in advance as the companies will need to complete several regulatory filings as well as complete all the planning for the new organization and operational models before approval.

What is the process for approving this acquisition?

Completion of a proposed acquisition is subject to customary closing conditions and regulatory review. This means that two primary conditions must be satisfied for the acquisition to close: regulatory (antitrust) clearance and shareholder approval. Prior to the shareholder vote, Intellisync will file a proxy statement with the Securities Exchange Commission (SEC) that provides information about the proposed deal. The final version of this proxy statement will be mailed to our shareholders prior to the meeting to approve the acquisition. During the regulatory review period, Nokia and Intellisync must remain independent and make all of their sales, marketing and strategic business activities and decisions independent of each other.

What are the key milestones in the acquisition approval timetable?

The exact timing of the deal is hard to pinpoint but the major milestones are as follows:

Sign binding merger contract

Regulatory review (antitrust)

European regulatory approval

Shareholder approval

Formal announcement of the deal closing communication

Does the approval involve approval from EU (European Union)?

In addition to clearance from the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), the closing of the transaction will be subject to regulatory approval in a few European jurisdictions.

Will Intellisync stock options for Intellisync employees immediately vest upon closing of the proposed acquisition?

The terms may vary among certain employees with regard to stock options and will be determined as part of the integration plan.

What is the impact of the proposed acquisition on Intellisync's current customer base?

Intellisync's current customer base will automatically be acquired by Nokia after the deal closes officially. At this time management cannot make an assessment on any aspect positive, negative or neutral with regard to this transaction on the current or prospective customer base.

Will Intellisync have a quarterly earnings announcement in February 2006 (Q2 earnings)?

Yes, it will be business as usual until the deal closes. This is simply a definitive intent to acquire Intellisync upon satisfaction of the closing conditions. This announcement does not indicate that the acquisition is complete.

Will Intellisync's stock be available for trading during this period?

Yes, Intellisync stock should still be available for trading, assuming there are no regulatory restrictions, up through the date of when the transaction closes, though certain individuals may be restricted due to the nature of the agreement.

Who were Intellisync's advisors in this acquisition?

Intellisync was advised by Evercore Partners, a leading advisory and investment firm providing advisory services to prominent multinational corporations on significant mergers, acquisitions, divestitures, restructurings and other strategic corporate transactions.

Is Nokia only buying technology or people too?

Nokia is in a better position to answer this, but they are buying the company as a whole, not just the assets. Our understanding is that the what stays, what goes aspects of the proposed acquisition will be determined over the next few months and will depend upon several factors including the transaction approval, market forces, economic, strategic and operational considerations. We will communicate further in accordance with SEC's communication guidelines as more information becomes available and possible to provide.

What will happen to Intellisync executives?

No announcements regarding members of the executive team, or any employees of Intellisync, have been made. Decisions regarding key employees, executives and others will be determined pending approval of the transaction and will be communicated by Nokia in due course.

How does Intellisync propose to ensure smooth integration of the companies?

Pending all regulatory and other approvals, the two companies will develop integration plans that build on the cultural similarities and the best business and product development practices from each company. The companies will make additional details and information about the acquisition available at: <http://www.intellisync.com/investors/>
