ITC / Entergy Transaction
MAY 2013 UPDATE

This update is the eighth in a series of periodic newsletters designed to keep ITC employees informed and updated on the ITC/Entergy transaction.

Transaction Update Just the Facts

As you know, Entergy Corporation and ITC Holdings Corp. are pursuing regulatory approval of an agreement under which Entergy will separate and then merge its electric transmission business into ITC in 2013. Entergy's transmission business comprises approximately 15,400 miles of lines at voltages of 69kV and above, associated substations, and the people who operate and maintain them. Following is an overview of the transaction and upcoming hearing dates.

Why this transaction? Regulatory mandates and consumer usage patterns are vastly different and greater than when the electric grid was built. The infrastructure investments required to address these demands are expected to increase significantly over the next two decades. The situation requires new business models and more focused, expert and financially flexible utilities.

How will it work? The transaction is a Reverse Morris Trust, which avoids tax costs for customers and shareholders. The result creates two separate and independent utilities serving the region – Entergy with generation and distribution, ITC with transmission.

Who must approve it? Federal, state and local regulators must approve the transaction in order for it to proceed. ITC shareholders have approved it.

What are the benefits? The key benefits to our customers, employees and communities are strength, expertise and opportunity.

Strength: a stronger grid and stronger utilities serving our region; two balance sheets more capable of financing the infrastructure investments required in the future.

Expertise: two companies singularly focused on their core businesses.

Opportunity: a new corporate citizen establishes its regional office in Jackson, Miss.; about 750 Entergy employees become the core of its regional workforce; the new company invests its time, philanthropy and capital here; growing infrastructure investments create economic activity and job opportunities; and the new model builds on the benefits of the wholesale electricity market with a regional view.
