With respect to the acquisition of InvenSense, Inc. and the strengthening of the sensor business

To TDK all employees:

TDK Corporation today resolved a resolution to enter into definitive agreement with InvenSense, Inc. (InvenSense) to acquire all of the shares of InvenSense, a world forerunner in inertial sensors, and make it our wholly owned subsidiary.

Our view of the transaction is as follows:

In January 2016, TDK agreed to enter into a business partnership with Qualcomm and to establish a joint venture. We are currently diligently moving ahead with procedures to establish the joint venture and we are also accelerating our efforts to pursue synergies with Qualcomm.

In addition to this business decision, as previously explained, we intend to acquire new business opportunities in the IoT field through three important areas as a future growth strategy of TDK, and we will focus on three strategic growth products to increase earnings for future growth as we approach our centennial as a company.

Among our strategic growth products, sensors and actuators and sensors in particular are important devices in the IoT field, and since last year we have acquired Micronas and Tronics as an aggressive management step. We are currently applying the technical know-how we have developed over many years in thin-film magnetic technology in HDD heads to enhance magnetic sensors, typical of which are TMR sensors, and are combining these organically with existing sensors that TDK already has as well as new types of sensors.

With hardware elements and various combinations of these, we will provide valuable solutions to expand the sensor business. In this regard, circuit technology that enables optimal use of hardware as well as software technology are also vital. Micronas, one of the companies we acquired, has a leading track record of many years in the field of Hall element magnetic sensors, and synergistic effects are already being achieved with TDK's high resolution TMR magnetic sensors.

InvenSense, the company we have decided to acquire at this time, is world forerunner in inertial sensors and has been at the forefront of development of 6-axis and 9-axis sensors worldwide. InvenSense's mainstay products to date have been inertial sensors mainly for ICT devices. With the increasing uptake of electrical components along with assisted driving and automatic driving technology in the automotive area, demand for inertial sensors in the automotive area is set to increase. Therefore, the acquisition of InvenSense as our next step in expanding our sensor business is crucial. With the ability to acquire the algorithms, software and area needs that InvenSense possesses, we will significantly expand our sensor lineup (and our sensor world) in the three important areas we are aiming for and, as a result, we will establish a business environment that lets us become involved in a wide array of products and technologies, from sensor elements to sensor systems, that incorporate modules and software.

Our acquisition of InvenSense on this occasion is to ensure the further growth of the TDK Group. By creating attractive products and providing sensor solutions for customers through our collaboration with the group in technologies and products, we will aim for high goals as a company with greater presence in the global IoT areas, where we can expect a wealth of business opportunities.

We look forward to realize Sensor World together with InvenSense.
