Tyco to Merge with Johnson Controls

Powerful combined company will create new possibilities for improving customer operations in buildings and beyond

Dear Colleagues:

We have just announced the exciting news that Tyco and Johnson Controls have agreed to merge to create the leader in building products and technology, integrated solutions and energy storage. The new combined company will be a powerful organization - uniquely positioned to provide the most comprehensive portfolio of building and energy platforms - integrating best-in-class product, installation and service capabilities across controls, fire, security, HVAC, power solutions and energy storage. The combination will bring together complementary businesses and strengths of two great companies, enabling us to meet the needs of a broad base of customers including large institutions, commercial buildings, retail, industrial, small business and residential.

By combining with Johnson Controls, we are accelerating our ability to partner with customers and deliver advanced building technology and integrated solutions that improve their overall performance and operations. In addition, we will combine our innovation pipelines to better capture the enormous smart market opportunities being created by software technology, greater connectivity and the Internet of Things.

Both companies have deeply experienced management teams with extensive market expertise, customer-centric operating philosophies and a commitment to growth. Following completion of the merger, which is expected by the end of fiscal year 2016, we will operate under the Johnson Controls plc name and the new company's place of incorporation and principal executive offices will be in Cork, Ireland, where Tyco's current global headquarters is located. The primary operational headquarters in North America for the combined company will be in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, USA, where Johnson Controls has been based. After the merger, I will serve as President and Chief Operating Officer, leading the combined business operations and the integration, and Johnson Controls Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Alex Molinaroli will serve as Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, leading the new company's strategy, governance and corporate functions. This structure will remain in place for 18 months, after which I will become Chief Executive Officer and Alex Molinaroli will transition to Executive Chairman.

Until the merger closes, the two companies will remain separate and focused on managing our respective businesses independently. During this time, it is absolutely imperative that we all proceed with business as usual. Our top priority continues to be serving the needs of our customers.

We are committed to keeping you informed about developments throughout this process. Today, we are holding a conference call with leadership so that they can help you understand more about the planned merger, and we will schedule an all-employee conference call or webcast to provide additional information and answer general employee questions - the specific details will be provided as soon as available. We will also provide information about significant decisions and developments to leaders and managers along the way, so if you have any questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to speak with them.

As you all know, this year marked the final year of our three-year plan as the new Tyco, and I am proud that we have delivered strong results for our customers and shareholders.

Thank you for your contributions to our success. I am excited about the opportunities ahead of us, and I look forward to what our combined companies can achieve together.

Regards,

George Oliver

Chief Executive Officer
